We are all different

It is clear that inclusiveness is created at school, because school is where a person spends a lot of time.

Inclusiveness is a very personal topic, because there are factors that depend on it. I think that typical inclusiveness in schools is bullying, racial discrimination and nationality.

For example, when I was 11, I was bullied by older guys because I was French. And to make this bullying for my nationality stop, I had to pretend to ignore the insults because my ex-professor didn't care.

Another example was when I went to the school summer camp. There was a Filipino child who was being bullied because he came from another country and was autistic. I haven't seen him since that incident.

With these examples I can confirm that nationality is the most typical inclusiveness at school because there are differences in language and culture.

One solution to stop bullying at school is for teachers to take action against the bully. To make them understand that bullying and prejudice only make hate.

This is important because many children and guys can go into depression, in the most extreme cases to the point of suicide. We must stop these prejudices as soon as possible in order to turn the school into a friendly and nice place.
